Grit Test

For the Grit Test I scored a 3.7 out of 5, and I'd like to think that that's pretty accurate. For the longest time, the only thing I had real grit for was performing and singing. I wasn't very proactive in class, and I never truly finished most of the personal art projects I have started.

When it came to perfecting my voice, I would practice everyday without fail. I'd teach myself new forms of singing and new styles, and passion hasn't wavered since. I do it a little less now because of my busier work schedule but it's always in the back of my mind. This might be the reason why I got a higher score than 50% of people who apparently took the quiz. Now, it is probably lower than what I wanted it to be but that's something I think I can work on in the future. I've certainly changed the way I study and do assignments in this semester of college.

And I hope that's a sign that I'm becoming more eager to take advantage of the lessons that I'm paying for, and actually utilize them in my field of choice.
